

Ptolemy's atlas of the known world, circa AD 150. This atlas depicts a reasonable map of the Mediterranean region, northern Africa, and western and central Asia. The lack of accurate longitudinal measurements gives the map a stretched look in the east-west direction. Also, Ptolemy used a value for the Earth's circumference of 29,000 km, an error that later caused Columbus to believe he had encountered Asia rather than the Americas.

